

Challenges to the heterosexual matrix

Facilitator and panelist biographies

Heather Tapley (facilitator) is an assistant professor in women's studies at UVic. Her current research interests include queer theory/queer materialisms, lesbian and gay studies/literature, feminist theory and feminist cultural studies.

Barbara Waterfall is a professor in the Indigenous specialization in social work at UVic. She identifies as an Ojibwe/Metis two-spirited woman. Her areas of scholarship include the inclusion of Indigenous knowledges within the western academy, decolonizing Indigenous social work education, and the inclusion of spirituality in research and teaching. Her work is informed by feminist anti-colonial discourse.

Eli Manning is a graduate student in the School of Social Work at UVic. Her thesis entitled "Who are the men in men who have sex with men?" interrogates the sex and gender constructions of men in HIV/AIDS research and discourse.

Aaron Devor is a professor of sociology and dean of graduate studies at UVic. His general area of research is located in the sociology of gender and sexuality.

Lyn Davis is a senior instructor in studies in policy and practice in the Faculty of Human and Social Development at UVic. She also teaches in dispute resolution, nursing and social work. Her consulting practice and research focus on housing and lesbian health and social issues.

Lisa Poole is a graduate student in sociology at UVic. Her current research focuses on bisexual visibility.

Daley Laing is a graduate student in cultural, social and political thought and sociology at UVic. Their area of study is theoretical understandings of non-normative gender practices and their implications for discussions of the body and radical political practice.

Dann Hoxsey is currently completing an honours degree in sociology. His thesis will explore the ways in which academic/institutional policies are shaping the coming out experience for GLBT university students.