

A catalyst lowers the activation energy for a chemical reaction. Here the uncatyalsed conversion of substrate S to product P passes by way of the high-energy transition state TS. In this case the metal catalysed version goes via a different transition state TS', which is very unstable in the free state but becomes viable on binding to the catalyst as TS'-M.