J: ...measured it from a like a tree or something like that. I can't remember.

S: What was that about?

M: The moisture and also the depth of the water.

S: Oh yeah, yeah.

J: Oh yeah and we were seeing...

M: I remember the depth part...

J: ...how much plant life or whatever was like in a certain amount of area.

S: Yeah, I remember that. It's all coming back to me now.

F: Yeah. You guys have a good memory for this. It's last year that you did that, right?

M: Well, I remember that part though because I just about fell in...

J: Laura fell in.

M: Yeah Laura fell in and that was bad.

J: She was funny.

S: And we went through the culvert. I remember that.

M: That was fun. Lisa wouldn't go through. She was too much of a chicken. She was afraid of snakes.

J: I tried to go through every time.

M: But he wouldn't let us.

S: That's right. I kept saying it was for insurance, well it was.

M: But then finally he let us go through and then we did it like four or five times in a row and like did we, I don't remember if we even tested the water that was going through the culvert...

S: Yeah that was one of our sites. That was site three, right?

M: Yeah.

S: So we did our tests. What did we do on those? I remember a velocity test where we were trying to float a little something down...

M: Oh yea

J: Oh, yeah...

M: That was fun

S: It kept getting caught up in grass and stuff cause there wasn't much water.

J: Yeah and there was like clay or something like that around there; it felt like it.

S: Yeah...

J: I was throwing it on the road.

S: ...it was very clay-ee.

M: Yeah and at some of the different sites some would have the clay site, and then there was really sandy, and then it was really dirt, like mud. And then I liked the one site that was really in Centennial where you could, ummm, go down far and there was the big, deep part and there were all these little, ummm, big crayfish. Some big crayfish.

S: Yeah, we did a different area in Centennial. We went to the area where there's no trails or anything.

F: Oh, right, yeah.

M: Yeah.
