

ON THIS THE DAY OF OUR INAUGURATION

C. DUFFY

Today on this, the inaugural occasion,
Do we come together to make a selection,
We'll rise from our seats and give out our voices,
We'll cast our votes to confirm our choices.

Some will be chosen without great inspection,
while for others we shall resort to election
But by adjournment, for certain, the officers chosen,
will have their new sense of duty awoken.

But what of the name to group us together?
Surely such a group would need something clever.
The name was required to be witty and cute,
but also apply to all in the group.

We're not alphas nor betas nor deltas nor phis,
As we struggled to find the acronym for these.
After a tightly regulated poll of the voters,
One name stood atop by all voting orders.

So today after consumption of pastries and tea,
The proclamation comes down: The Sigmas are we.
